

SENATE DEBATES TAKING VACATION FOR MONTH'S TIME

Would Let House Catch
Up, But Delay Final Adjournment.

Whether the senate will take a vacation of a month to allow house committees to catch up on legislation, or whether it will put more pressure on the committees to finish the more important bills and adjourn by the midsummer has caused considerable discussion among members of the upper branch of congress during the last few days.

If a recess should be taken it would mean a continuance of the extra session to within a few days of the regular session, which begins early in December.

Tariff Bill Paramount.
It is regarded as improbable that the permanent tariff bill can be made ready for the senate's consideration before the latter part of July, and that measure is conceded to be the paramount issue for the present session.

The packers' control bill is expected to be passed this week. Then there will be the soldier relief, the maternity and infant government reorganization measures, such as bills for establishment of departments of welfare and public works, reclassification of government employees and a host of less important measures.

A bill authorizing merger of the street car lines of Washington will be acted upon within a week or two, whether the senate recesses or adjourns.

The senate district committee will decide on Wednesday whether or not to report favorably the Ball amendment prolonging the life of the rent commission, which under the law expires in October.

The senate is expected to pass the bill introduced last Friday by Senator Capper, of Kansas, chairman of the subcommittee on education, providing for a model school system, with compulsory attendance between the ages of 7 and 16, and regulating child labor and teacher pay. The district day-light saving law, regulation of pawnbrokers, restriction of the sale of firearms, hotel rate regulation and curb of check fraud are among measures to be acted upon.

But for the tariff bill it is believed the senate would finish its work in time to adjourn about the first of August, the army appropriation bill which passed last Wednesday, being the last of the big supply bills.

Senators are in conference and an agreement is expected to be reached today.

PEACERESOLUTION WILL BE ADOPTED BY HOUSE TODAY

Conference on Naval Bill
Must Settle Important Disputes.

The house today will adopt the Potter peace resolution ending the technical state of war with Germany.

Democrats will continue their attacks on the measure, but the possibility of their efforts is conceded. The house indicated its sentiment when it voted to sidetrack the Knox resolution, which the senate passed, in favor of the resolution drawn by its own committee.

After the house has acted, the peace resolution will go to conference, where delegations of each chamber will seek to harmonize their differences. The senate is a bit disturbed at the activity of the house in seeking to guide foreign relations, since the senate is constitutionally vested with this right in co-operation with the President but it is doubtful if this feeling will be strong enough to bring a deadlock in conference.

Aims at Same Result.
The difference, after all, is merely one of method, and does not affect the end sought. The Knox resolution repeals the declaration of war; the Porter resolution states simply that peace exists. House leaders assert their resolution more clearly conforms to the desires of President Harding and Secretary Hughes, and this contention may have influence.

Second in importance to the Knox resolution in the week's congressional program is the conference between the two chambers on the naval appropriations bill. Three days' discussion accomplished nothing, the delegations even disagreeing on minor changes.

Differ on Disarmament.
The two chief differences are on disarmament, and the size of the navy's personnel, and these have not yet been reached. It is believed in some quarters executive pressure may be necessary to bring about an adjustment which will permit the naval bill to become law by July 1.

If it has not been finally adopted on that date, the navy will start the year without funds.

The senate this week is expected to enact the packer control bill, which the house already has passed. Much debate is in prospect, and senators are insisting that the house bill be adopted in place of the one offered by the senate committee. The senate also may receive from the finance committee the soldier bonus bill, with recommendation for immediate passage.

TRADE PACTS AIM OF SOVIET RUSSIA
